

ABSTRACT

The study aimed at identifying factors contributing to puerperal sepsis in post natal mothers in the maternity ward at Kampala International University Teaching Hospital(KIUTH). This study was a quantitative cross sectional in nature revealing that 60% of the mothers believe that puerperal sepsis was leading to complications in female reproductive system infections, infertility and blood infection.